nobilissimus'- that is, the court painter Cosme Tura.¹⁶ Although a painter clearly lacked the resources for advancement available to a humanist or a scribe, there are a number of interesting parallels between the fortunes at court of Tura and Carbone. Carbone was the son of a small merchant, Tura of a shoemaker.

Pictura and Scriptura: Cosm Tura and style as courtly

The career of Cosm'e Tura (ca. 1430-95) presents considerable challenges, not least because, although richly documented, very few of his major works on mural, panel, and canvas survive. None of them are signed, and only one can be dated 'with any certainty, the monumental canvas organ shutters of 1469 for Ferrara Cathedral (Ferrara, Museo dell ...

Campbell sensibly proposes to examine Tura's art for what it is, rather than what it is not, and to answer, as he says, the question "why did Tura paint as he did" (1). To that end, he explores many dimensions of the culture and politics affecting the artist and his patrons.

Review: Cosmè Tura of Ferrara: Style, Politics, and the Cosmè Tura, also spelled Cosimo, (born c. 1430, Ferrara [Italy]—died 1495, Ferrara), early Italian Renaissance painter who was the founder and the first significant figure of the 15th-century school of Ferrara. His well-documented career provides a detailed glimpse of the life of a court painter.

Cosmè Tura | Italian painter | Britannica.com

Cosmè Tura was an official court painter to the ruling Este family and its circle in Ferrara. Although this work appears to be an independent circular panel (or tondo), several factors suggest otherwise. First, the painting is smaller than most late fifteenth-century tondos and commemorative birth salvers.
